Loomer House, 2003

Historic Overview:

Detroit architect Almon C. Varney designed this Richardsonian Romanesque residence for George W. Loomer in 1888. Originally built as a single-family dwelling, it was later converted to apartments but has not been altered on the exterior. It features a two-story turret bay with conical roof on the façade with a roman arched porch. The house and its neighbor, the Hunter House at 77 W. Hancock are the only two houses left on the block built before 1900.¹
